Case study context

Nexus Financial Services is a growing financial services company in Lagos, Nigeria. As the company expanded, decisions remained informal, with no established framework for governance, risk management, or compliance.

1. Governance, Risk Management and Compliance — in my own words

Governance: Governance is how leaders set direction, approve rules, assign responsibility, and make sure the business is run properly.

Risk Management: Risk management is identifying what could go wrong, assessing how serious it could be, and choosing ways to reduce or handle the risk before decisions are made.

Compliance: Compliance means knowing and following the laws, regulations, and company rules that apply to the business.

2–3. Three observed issues and their GRC categories

GRC pillar	Issue observed at Nexus	Why this is a problem
Governance	There is no clear process for approving or enforcing company policies.	Without approved rules and accountable decision-makers, employees may apply inconsistent practices.
Risk Management	Business decisions are made without a standard way to assess risks first.	Risks may be overlooked or accepted without understanding potential financial or operational impact.
Compliance	No specific person is responsible for monitoring regulatory requirements and deadlines.	The company could miss regulatory obligations or deadlines and face preventable compliance exposure.

4. One recommended action to improve the GRC programme

Establish a formal, board-approved GRC framework. As part of this single initiative, Nexus should designate owners for policy approval, require documented risk assessments before important business decisions, and maintain a regulatory obligations register with assigned responsibilities and deadlines. Management should review progress regularly. This would create clearer accountability, help staff make risk-informed decisions, and reduce the chance of missed compliance requirements.
